THE PARISHIONER

Dear Friends:

In her book, Liturgy of the Ordinary, author Tish Warren talks about how much she hates to make her bed in the morning. She writes, "What's the point? You'd mess it up again that evening....Make the bed, unmake it, make it again, over and over. And for what?".

She asked people on Facebook, clearly a dependable authority, "Do you make your bed each day?" Some responded, yes, everyday. Some thought it was preposterous to even consider making it. Others thought not making the bed was like not brushing your teeth or paying your taxes. Still others make their bed erratically, maybe three out of seven days. Some even make their bed at night, just before they get in it.

The exercise with bed-making made her examine other daily routines in her life. We all have them. She thought about how her cell phone is in her bedroom and every morning after she gets up, she looks at it. One of the first things she does each day is pick it up, like "digital caffeine". Tish noticed she'd check email, Facebook, newsfeed, etc. If she couldn't get her cell phone, she'd check her computer, TV, something electronic. Then she read about how if humans rescue a baby animal in the wild, the animal is said to be "imprinted". It accepts the human as its mother. From that point on the baby animal will believe all good things come from people. It's no longer wild and can't live on its own. She realized she was "imprinted" by technology. Like a mountain lion cub attracted to her human, Tish was looking for all good things to come from glowing screens. Technology began to fill every empty moment in the day. She writes: "Without realizing it, I had slowly built a habit: a steady resistance to and dread of boredom". She concluded, "that can't be good."

So she made a new routine for Lent. Slowly and in small steps, she started by moving her cell phone out of her bedroom for overnight charging. Then she began to get up, make her bed and sit quietly on the freshly made bed in silence. The new routine didn't make her wildly successful but she began to notice that she was imprinted differently. Instead of cooperating with technology and inertia to define her day, she was collaborating with God. Her bed-making, in a small way, was bringing order out of chaos; small order, but order. God entered chaos and brought order and beauty. Somehow making that bed made a small rectangle in her otherwise messy, distracted mind.

As she sat on her bed, she read scripture or prayed. Small prayers, Lord's prayer, asking God into her life each day. She laid out her worries, hopes, questions before God. A new routine in Lent.

Sometimes in the Lenten season I set myself up to fail. I used to think that was the point. I'd fail at resisting chocolate or meditation and then I'd realize how powerless I am and how much I need God. That's not really the wrong outcome but Lent can offer us more. Maybe Lent is a chance to "imprint on God". We are shaped everyday by habit and routine. In church language we call that "liturgy and ritual". We're called to be a people who live "marked as Christ's own forever."

"Without realizing it, I had slowly built a habit: a steady resistance to and dread of boredom".

er". We are taking God's love into every daily experience of our life, to make that love known in the world. We're formed by our worship, our routines and rituals each Sunday and whenever we gather to pray. Again and again we repent and believe. We give thanks. Our spiritual struggles really repeat and circle around. The work of faith each Sunday is repetitive. Yet, these worship rituals bypass our heads and move into our cellular memory and our hearts. They give us energy and nourish us in imperceptible ways. We can draw on those reserves when we're challenged. When we don't feel close to God or loved.

We're formed by our daily routines too. Some of those routines seem meaningless and repetitive. But what if those daily, ordinary tasks are actually holy? What if they can be seen through the lens of a Lenten offering? I read there's a sign in a church parish hall that reads "Everyone wants a revolution. No one wants to do the dishes." Maybe the kind of repeated, quiet offerings of bringing small order to chaos in our lives each day, offered to God, is a revolution of the Spirit. For Lent, I invite you to offer something ordinary to God. Maybe it's going to the grocery store, making your bed, moving your cell phone? Each of us must decide.

I've moved my phone at least across the room and I've given up checking it for at least the first hour of the morning. I've failed a couple of times but it's early. Slowly and in small steps, instead of concluding I'm powerless. I'm concluding I'm powerless, but I can try again. I'm cultivating a habit of slowing down and entering the new day giving my anxiety, my need to fix things, to know things, to change things to Almighty God. I'm trusting each daily, ordinary ritual is sufficient, enough and holy in God's eyes. God is helping us bring order out of chaos and healing love into each moment. In the wilderness of ordinary days and habits, God is near.

I hope I see you at church,

Glenda

ASK THE VESTRY

Q: "Last Sunday I saw someone wearing a Vestry nametag helping a family find the nursery. What do vestry members do each Sunday?"

A: Glad you asked! For over 10 years, All Saints has had a "VPoD" - Vestry Person of the Day - assigned to attend all four Sunday services each week. The 15 vestry members rotate through the calendar, each spending three or four Sundays a year as VPoD. They open the church at 7:00 am and close it by 7:00 pm, remaining on property during all services. (Yes, we get to go home in the afternoon!) The VPoD assists the clergy with any building or parishioner needs so they can stay focused on the services. Part traffic cop, fill-in usher, direction giver and greeter, your VPoD is present to help anyone who needs them.

Lenten Mite Box Fundraiser

You may remember back in the day of vinyl records and cassette tapes, we received mite boxes during Lent to fill with the coins that we saved when we refrained from buying our usual soda or a candy bar.

Once again, the All Saints Outreach

Committee is reviving the mite box this Lent to raise money for our 2017 Rise Against Hunger (formerly Stop Hunger Now) meal packing. In 2016, All Saints packed 12,096 meals that were sent by Stop Hunger Now to our brothers and sisters in need of nourishing food. This year our goal is to pack 20,000 meals.

Each meal is nutritiously sound, consisting of rice, soy meal, dehydrated vegetables and fortified with 23 essential vitamins and nutrients. If you were not able to join us at the 2016 meal packing, this link will give you more information about Rise Against Hunger: <http://www.riseagainsthunger.org/>

In order to reach the All Saints' goal of 20,000 meals we are asking you to help by filling your mite box this Lent. Boxes are available at the church in the cloister.

During Lent, as you decide to give up soda, candy -- or nowadays lattes and scones -- please place the money you would have spent into the mite box; we have both adult and child size mite boxes. There is a direct correlation between your giving and feeding the hungry. One meal cost 29 cents, a package of six meals costs $1.74 and a Rise Against Hunger box full of 36 packages (216 meals) costs $62.64. It's that direct and it's that simple.

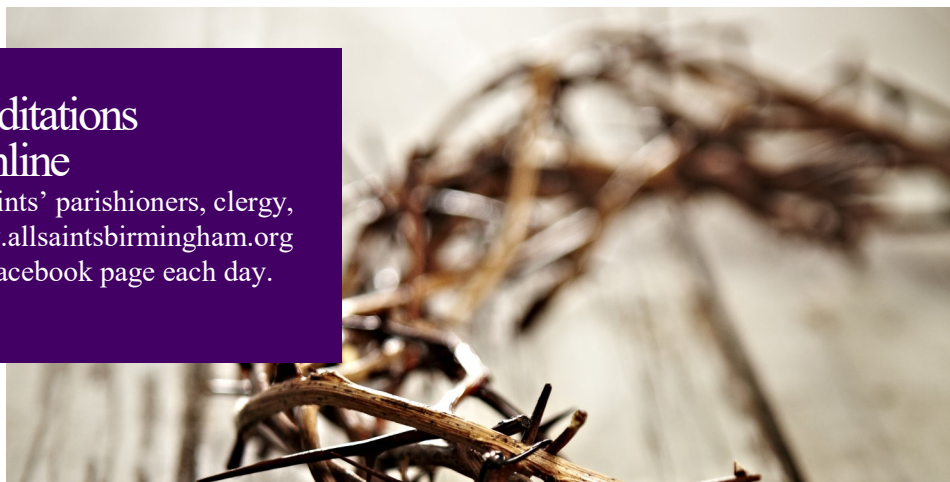

You can return your mite boxes -- hopefully filled to the brim -- to All Saints during Easter week. Please join us in reviving an old tradition -- updated with a new style -- so that All Saints can pack 20,000 Rise Against Hunger meals later this year.

We will also be sharing a small portion of the proceeds with Episcopal Relief and Development to assist in their mission of serving hungry and the poor. <http://www.episcopalrelief.org/>

A Lecture by The Rev. Ed Bacon

"The House of Love and the House of Fear -- The Key to the Mind of Christ"

Rev. Ed Bacon is former rector of All Saints, Pasadena, and acclaimed author of 8

Habits of Love: Overcome Fear and Transform Your Life. He is a frequent guest on Oprah's Soul Series, and also contributes to the Huffington Post and Truthdig. Archbishop Desmond Tutu said of 8 Habits of Love, "Ed Bacon's book has left me tingling with excitement. Living the habits of love he describes initially seems difficult, but then he offers real life examples of people doing just that, and what seemed far too idealistic begins to seem doable even by the likes of me." Rev. Bacon has received numerous accolades for his peace and interfaith work. He now calls Birmingham home with his wife, Hope, and we are thrilled to have him join us.
